THE NATURE OF CITIES FESTIVAL

Every city you've ever stepped foot in was first imagined by somebody – or many people, in someway. Sometimes what was imagined was never even built. Like Asia Cairns by Vincent Callebaut or Clusters in the Air by Arata Isozaki. The Nature of Cities Festival is an experiment in transdisciplinary collaboration, radical imagination and a collective effort to bring many voices together for the future of cities.

The festival was designed to push boundaries to radically imagine our cities for the future. The event spanned five days with programming across all regional time zones and was provided in multiple languages. At a moment in time where cities around the world were gripped with the COVID-19 pandemic, the festival offered us the ability to truly connect local place and ideas on a global scale for much broader perspective and participation than any one physical meeting in any one city could ever have achieved.

It was our great pleasure to welcome 2284 people across the globe from 22 - 26 February 2021 to our Imagined City. We whole heartedly thank you all for bringing your curiosity and creativity; your passions and your work; your dreams and visions; and above all your ideas and imagination to create this glocal collective push to build cities that are better for nature and all people.

A big thank you from the festival team:

About The Program

This program lists each Plenary, Fieldtrip, Seed Session and Micro-talk organized and presented at TNOC Festival.

TNOC FESTIVAL PLENARY

The program begins with the Plenary sessions. Each TNOC Festival plenary is named after a famous park, and blends Art Interventions including poetry, film, musical performances with engaging Dialogues, Conversations, and Keynote presentations by urban thought leaders from around the world.

TNOC FESTIVAL SESSIONS

Field Trips, Seed Sessions, and MicroTalks

Each session listed was carefully curated to design transdisciplinary, engaging and innovative small and large group workshops, provide interactive tours of city spaces, and provide a platform for short talks that highlight important ideas and actions from diverse people in cities around the world.

Los protagonistas en el camino hacia la cima de la montaña seran un conjunto de reflexiones acerca de la resiliencia, la transformacion y la importancia de estos espacios naturales en las ciudades.

Session Submission: Carolina Figueroa Arango

MONDAY

Strategies to raise awareness and help city governments to implement biodiversity policies and projects

Seed Session

This session discusses examples where city governments have become interested in biodiversity, implementing policies, projects or campaigns. How did this happen? What were the ingredients that helped to raise awareness about biodiversity within the government that led to a new biodiversity policy or project? What collaborations or processes, initiated by someone inside the government (city staff or elected official) and/or outside the government (academic, scientist, activist), led (or will lead) to new biodiversity conservation policies or actions? We will set the stage by giving brief examples of people working with city governments from Japan, New Zealand, and United States. Come with your ideas/examples to discuss. As you come in to the session, place your examples in the zoom chat (with your name and email) and we will try to get to them for a brief discussion. The idea is to have examples from all over the world.

Session Submission: Mark Hostetler

The therapeutic benefits of parks and open spaces; healing a present & post pandemic world.

Seed Session

Discuss how open spaces and parks are being used to deal with public issues around equity, social injustice, and as important vessels for healing a world in need of rejuvenation.

The Changing Form of Nature: A Multi-sensory Exploration of Our Connection to Nature

Seed Session

Three themes will be explored: 1. Digital Nature vs Authentic Nature Experiences 2. Virtual vs Augmented Nature 3. Urban Nature vs Wilderness. We will use examples (eg. video, drawing) to prompt, probe and provoke reactions to create a backdrop to the emerging discourse.

Session Submission: Tadhg MacIntyre

Unfolding Doughnut Economy dilemmas in the urban anthropocene.

Seed Session

Re-aligning neighbourhood everyday-life along Doughnut-Economy principles is huge task that require substantial transformations: rethinking human/non-human interaction and the way urban areas are built and maintained. This Seed-Session aims at chiselling-out bite-size chunks of this complexity along connected dilemmas in urban greening approaches such as nature-based-solutions and the doughnut economy model.

Session Submission: Johannes Riegler

The Renaissance of Public Urban Parks

Seed Session

From theory to practice, the session will address the issue of public health at the origin of the appearance of the urban public park, the benefits of nature and parks on public health and urban public parks today's as essential green infrastructure in the city.

Session Submission: Jonathan Cha

Towards a water ethic for cities

Seed Session

After introducing our ethical code for water through a TNOF Roundtable, we would like to share it with a wider audience and receive critical feedback. We plan two sessions: 1)introduce the code for criticism and comments, and 2) share related best practices for water providers, users, and governance.

Session Submission: Diane Pataki

MONDAY

Co-Creating Sustainability: Integration of Local Ecological Knowledge in Art Works

Seed Session

The workshop will use the approach of Science Cafe and CLIPS tools with emphasis on open discussion and aims to set the ground for a material which later can be published in the special issue of Sustainability (ISSN 2071-1050). Based on the number of participants, the workshop members will be requested to work in groups and provide insights of: where and how LEK appears in urban environments through art works and/or as integrated part in art works. The success of the workshop will very much depend on the case studies brought by the participants and thus a short form will be sent to the participants prior to the workshop.

Session Submission: BAIBA Pruse

Translocal adventures in developing an Urban Systems Community of Practice, with UrbanA and ECOLISE

Seed Session

ECOLISE's "Communities for Future" action platform is supporting local European communities to build a healthier, fairer, regenerative world. The Urban Systems Community of Practice is one part of our ecosystem to support this eco-social just transition. Through experimentation and learning, a beautiful adventure is unfolding. Magical collective visions are emerging.

Session Submission: Duncan Crowley

Construyendo equidad en red desde tu ciudad (ES)

Seed Session

Se presentará la percepción de entrevistas realizadas desde la red Amazilia y se creará un espacio de discusión sobre cómo mejorar la falta de seguridad, recursos o incluso acompañamiento, que suelen ser factores que hacen que las mujeres desistan en sus intentos por desarrollar la actividad como profesión o esparcimiento.

Session Submission: Tatiana Sánchez

MONDAY

Urban nature and economic growth – compatible or discordant?

Seed Session

In this session we will start with a discussion trigger, pointing to the need for a 'system', or 'culture' change' at the level of prioritizing economic development/revenue-generation in urban green planning, and then unpack this very claim through examples on the ground (Chinese eco-cities and recent greening initiatives in Europe)

Session submission: Amalia Calderón-Argelich

TUESDAY

Urban Industrial Interface - crossing fence lines to improve communities with nature

Seed Session

The place where urban industrial lands abut residential neighborhoods is usually devoid of nature and forgotten by planners and place-makers. We can do better by encouraging and enabling industry to invest in nature that improves community outcomes and creates meaningful partnerships for action, employment and education. We will use polling technology to create word clouds of responses to open questions as a way to allow attendees to interact. The word clouds will guide our discussion.

Session Submission: Margaret O'Gorman

Reimagining the binational border: Tijuana River watershed

Virtual stakeholder engagement for NBS planning - challenges and opportunities

Seed Session

Ten mini-presentations from Global North and South will provide inspiration for an interactive white-board brainstorming on how to organise stakeholder participation related to NBS. Virtual engagement brings opportunities, but has been shown to be limited in who it reaches. This has been a critical issue during COVID, but can also provide insights into future planning under even more "normal" circumstances. Join us to come up with solutions on how to use digital tools for effective and meaningful engagement! We have speakers talking about the use of Minecraft and 3D modelling, mixed methods of engagement, tools to reach harder to reach groups, ethics, and PPGIS surveys, etc.

Session Submission: Heidi Tuhkanen

Financing greener cities for the future we want

Seed Session

Facilitate discussion innovative approaches that have been used to mobilize finance & investment in nature for cities, to up-scale the implementation of nature-based solutions. The session will also showcase some examples of innovative approaches and solutions to securing finance for nature in cities

Session Submission: Aloke Barnwal

Nature-Based Solutions as a means to boost urban climate change adaptation

Seed Session

Europe has been identified as one of the most vulnerable areas to climate change. Nature-Based Solutions have proven to be one of the most effective solutions in tackling climate change adaptation in heavily urbanized areas, enhancing the crucial role of cities and citizens in directing and managing future transformations. Starting from the experience of the EU funded project LIFE Metro Adapt & Enhancing Climate Change Adaption strategies and measures in the Metropolitan City of Milan, the session will create a space of dialogue among the key stakeholders which can be potentially involved in the implementation of sustainable strategies to limit the impact of climate change. The speakers will share examples of effective measures and strategies implemented in heavily urbanized areas with a specific focus on the most effeective solutions.

Gearing up for mainstreaming nature in cities

Seed Session

Gearing up for mainstreaming nature in cities. Cities are connected landscapes, landscapes of ecosystems, of cultures, of visions and futures. As landscapes in constant flux, the need for nature is contested and manifested through different plans, voices and interest of different actors as well as supported through various forms of institutions: policies, strategic plans and programs, organisations and citizen initiatives across scales. This is what makes managing and governing nature in cities a complex endeavour. Over the past years we have gathered amounting knowledge both expert and tacit on the importance of nature in cities and on opportunities, innovations as well as challenges on how to bring nature in cities. In this session we want to step on this knowledge and ask a more daring question: What transformations do we need for bringing nature in cities globally? Which are the transformations that we need to scale?

Think globally, act locally - what does this have to do with my city?

Seed Session

The global challenges of the 21st century can only be solved with, in and through cities. There is an urgent need to consider environmental, social as well as local and global aspects in an integrated and holistic manner. But the question is, how can cities do this?

Session Submission: Luciana Maia

How do we improve the availability of evidence of the impact of NBS on health?

Seed Session

Following a short introduction about the aims of the session, Clair Cooper (Durham University) will set the scene with an overview of a study of the relationship between different types of Nature-based Solutions, their ecosystems services and health outcomes using data from the Urban Nature Atlas developed by Naturvation. Rania Sermpezi and David Tome Lourido from Connecting Nature will talk about their work to develop indicators and a data platform for NBS in Glasgow. Danielle MacCarthy, will talk about a case study in Belfast that examined the relationship between aging, nature and physical activity.

Session Submission: Clair Cooper

How to successfully adopt Urban Living Labs

Seed Session

Urban living labs (ULLs) have been recognized as a suitable approach for co-creating nature-based solutions (NBS) in urban settings. Yet, cities face several barriers when adopting ULLs for the co-creation and implementation of NBS. In this workshop, we want to explore and identify possible factors, methods and strategies, so called enablers, that help address those barriers and enable the successful adoption of ULLs for co-creating NBS. Together with the workshop participants we will, through the use of interactive online tools, explore solutions and methods which can help cities to adopt ULLs. We will also work to verify some pre-identified enablers, and discuss and assess the impact these can have in cities.

Nature-based Solutions in small cities: the case of Nicosia

Field Trip

The trip takes participants through different small NBS solutions in the city of Nicosia: from pollinator gardens along the river, to shading installations and a communal garden right in the center of the old town of Nicosia. It is the journey of a small Mediterranean city towards sustainability.

Session Submission: Myrto Skouroupathi

WEDNESDAY

Nature-Based Solutions in urban areas: A virtual trip in the Milan Metropolitan Area

Field Trip

The Metropolitan Area of Milan is prone to flood risk, due to the expected increase the Olona and Seveso rivers and the high urbanization level. In an attempt to gain an in-depth knowledge of the phenomenon and to reduce its impact, EU funded LIFE Metro Adapt project analyzed the hydraulic risk of the area taking into account the rainwater retention capacity of the soil, based on the soil use/cover and pedological soil characteristics. One of the main strategies that can be adopted in urban areas to improve the effectiveness of climate change adaptation measures is the design and development of the so-called Nature-Based Solutions(NBS).

Session Submission: Marta Arosio

Forestami – A three million trees campaign for the city of Milan

Urban Parks Urban Futures—Europe and Africa

Seed Session

Urban nature is vital to the health and well-being of millions of people and communities. The COVID-19 pandemic is spotlighting urban parks and the urgent need for connection between people and nature as a catalyst for mental and physical health. How do we now amplify our reach into citywide urban planning? This interactive session will explore ways in which parks and open spaces can amplify the value of nature for social cohesion and utilize their impact for recovery, posing three questions on what major challenges exist; how those challenges create new ways of thinking and then what opportunities exist for innovation in planning our future cities.

Session Submission: Dominic Regester

Listening to Dutch Kills

Field Trip

This walk will explore the Dutch Kills, an industrial canal in New York City, and will visit hidden ecologies and green spaces around its polluted landscape, including wetlands restorations, guerrilla gardens, and wild-growing groves of trees. This virtual hike will include live narration alongside excerpts from a 2019 sound walk curated by the presenters titled "Listening to Dutch Kills," in which local artists creatively investigated the perspectives of other species living this waterway. The Dutch Kills is a Queens tributary of the Newtown Creek, one of the most polluted bodies of water in the United States, but is also home a surprising amount of urban nature, including a wide variety of birds, fish, and wildflowers. Join the curators of Chance Ecologies on a creative, artistic exploration of this post-industrial landscape.

Session Submission: Nathan Kensinger

Campus of Landscape Architecture School: Our Real-World Lab of Nature in Cities

Field Trip

Real-world labs enable social learning among researchers, students, practitioners and the public. We invite you on a tour of the university campus in Rapperswil, Switzerland to discuss our approach of teaching and researching sustainable open space design (e.g. horticulture, biodiversity, rainwater, solar energy, digitalisation) in our urban lab.

THURSDAY

A new curriculum in university lecturing – Merging ecology and planning

Seed Session

There is no city without nature and no landscape without settlement. But what seems so self-evident to us harbours still numerous conflicts: Disciplinary - Organizational - Linguistic - Cultural. We have to make a shift - this starts already in education in order to be able to develop sustainable cities.

Session Submission: Anke Domschky

Being the city's metabolism - stories of the hidden essentials

Seed Session

Building on a similar session from TNOC Summit 2019, this session will invite participants to briefly write and tell two rounds of stories. First, embodying a resource that moves through their city; then, their first memory of encountering this resource. This sets a basis for dialogue about essential urban resources.

THURSDAY

Everton Commons: from post-industrial heritage to extraordinary wildflower viewpoint, once Europe's most densely-populated neighbourhood

Field Trip

Starting at Everton Community Garden, a group of local activists - a mix of an ecologist, resident, historian, producer, youth worker and artist - will point out historic points of interest, dramatic viewpoints, sharing insights from local people, walking through several wildflower mosaics, looking out over the Mersey and finishing at a new wildflower site in Anfield, next to the LFC stadium. Football dominates the North Liverpool landscape and mentality - a religion of its own. The views over the Irish Sea and mix of housing experiments throw up questions about how a more cohesive neighbourhood vision can be borne - one of restoration, colour and beauty.

Session Submission: Polly Moseley

El arbolado de la Ciudad de México: su evaluación, manejo y desafíos

Field Trip

Visitaremos algunos parques y lugares importantes de la ciudad para mostrar la realidad de las ciudades arboladas. FRIDAY

Know your city, Know your role!

Seed Session

A city's nature is determined not only by architectural development but also by the people and its history. Our session focuses on developing an understanding of how we as students and professionals can lead a city into the future while considering the nature of communities and the city cultural heritage. Through this seed session, we seek to advocate for the importance of historical context and the community's cultural requirements as major factors in contributing towards shaping the future of a city.

Session Submission: Paurush Singhal

Fire in the Belly: Advocacy and Action for Urban Nature.

Natura: Achieving climate justice through locally-led, nature-based solutions in urban areas

The session will be an interactive session, with an introduction to PlanAdapt, our underlying principles, and how they connect with our way of doing work, and our work. After an introduction to the concept of Urban EbA, and its instances across the globe, as submitted to an online survey (convened by PlanAdapt and IUCN), and shared at various forums, we will share emerging principles for achieving climate justice through locally-led, nature-based solutions. We identify how the principles were achieved in practice, by highlighting particular cases, their contexts and the processes they employed. We invite the informality and design for justice TWGs of the NATURA network to produce significant contributions to this work, through reflections on their work, principles and goals of their work.

Bumble Bees, Citizen Protest and the Future of Friche Josaphat: Learning from Conservation Practices in the Brussels Fringe?

Field Trip

This fieldtrip will guide us to two biodiverse, but contested sites in the Brussels fringe: the Vogelzangbeek valley and the post-industrial landscape of Friche Josaphat. The first site was classified as a nature reserve in the mid-1990s after years of political struggle; the second one is on the verge of being developed into a new residential neighborhood. During this fieldtrip, we will learn from experiences at Vogelzangbeek to empathize with one of the inhabitants of Friche Josaphat, a Bumble Bee. Through this visual narrative, we want to invite politicians, planners and designers to look at the future of Friche Josaphat through different eyes.

Session Submission: Jolein Bergers
